ABSTRACT

The document, designed to provide the basis for educational services for Alaskan mentally handicapped and emotionally disturbed children and adolescents, displays information on 22 mental health planning districts in the state. Provided for each district is a narrative summary, a list of communities in the district, demographic data, a resource inventory, and a section on indicators of need. Also included are graphic illustrations of the indicators of need comparing the districts to a statewide average. (BD)

INTRODUCTION

The information contained in this document was compiled by the Division of Mental Health and Developmental Disabilities in order to establish the foundation for the planning and development of services specifically designed to meet the needs of children and adolescents in Alaska. It is our hope that local communities will find this a useful resource document as they determine the needs of children and adolescents and develop plans to meet those needs at the local level.

Initially, we found that information on the needs of Alaska's youth is scanty and sometimes conflicting. The information presented in this document reflects our efforts to clearly present data on Alaska's school age population that is both understandable and meaningful in planning for the prevention and treatment of emotional disturbance and mental illness in youth. Accordingly, the information is displayed on a district basis (the 22 mental health planning districts in Alaska) as this method is considered the most useful to local planning agencies within each district. For each district we have prepared a narrative summary; listed the communities in the district; provided demographic data; compiled a resource inventory; and included a section on indicators of need.

In addition, we have prepared graphic illustrations of the indicators of need comparing the districts to a statewide average. Statistics on suicides are not presented as the data was not substantiated and apparently inaccurate.

We have made no attempt to draw any specific conclusions regarding the development of particular programs or services based on the information as presented.

We do, however, offer a general conclusion based on what we have gathered: The need to address youth related problems in Alaska is accelerating at an ever increasing rate. Though the range of youth related needs is broad and complex, and the services thus far established do much to satisfy these needs, there is a growing concern that too little is being done. The issue of youth related needs and services is a difficult one to assess but some basic starting points do exist.

Oftentimes youth related problems stem from a weak or disjointed family structure. In Volume II of the 1978 Task Panel Reports Submitted to the President's Commission on Mental Health this issue is discussed.

> "It has been well demonstrated that children's emotional problems are strongly associated with qualities of parent-child interaction. In particular, it is known that when children are reared in homes where there is a lack of conversation exchange, where parents do not interact positively with their children, and where there is a lack of play opportunities, the development of language, intelligence, and scholastic skills is likely to be impaired."
> "...the quality of care (in terms of sensitivity and responsiveness to the child's needs), the relationship between the child and those who look after him, and the consistency and efficiency of childrearing methods are of considerable importance. Markedly inconsistent patterns of punishment, repressive or brutal handling, and a lack of concern all increase the risk of mental health problems."

It is known that parents who have had histories of mental disorders also have children with mental problems. It is therefore advantageous to consider parental mental health and the family structure when attempting to solve a youth's problems.

There is a great need for the development and establishment of programs and services specifically designed for youth nationwide. The Task Panel Reports cited above address one aspect of this problem.

> "Too often, even where an adolescent has made entry into the mental health system and has been carefully evaluated, recommendations cannot be carried out because an appropriate facility or therapeutic service is not available or is already overloaded. So adolescents are simply "dumped" into adult facilities or otherwise inappropriate services."

The need for these programs and services goes beyond the delivery of mental health services. There is a lack of recreational centers, youth employment centers, receiving homes, and referral and counseling centers. The importance of providing services, programs, and centers designed with children in mind cannot be understated.

The lack of coordination of services for youth is another primary problem. The Task Panel Reports comment on this aspect.

> "Communication between welfare agencies, juvenile courts, and schools is frequently lacking, with little or no planning for the young person's immediate and longer term needs."

The lack of coordination of services carries a high cost. Children in need are not put in touch with helpful individuals as quickly as might otherwise be possible in an integrated system. There is a duplication of some services and an absence of others. Information on viable program successes is not disseminated. A concerted effort is needed to coordinate existing and future services.

One section of the appendix contains information on the nature, scope and necessity of efforts aimed at the prevention of mental illness. This information provides a base for the understanding and development of the role of prevention efforts in Alaska. The role of prevention as a component part of many youth services and programs should be pursued.

An additional area of concern, that is not readily apparent from the data presented, is the number of youth in the custody of the Department of Health & Social Services that are placed in out-of-state institutions. The Division of Corrections reports that they average 35 juvenile delinquents placed in institutions outside of Alaska; the Division of Social Services reports they have 37 youngsters in out-of-state institutions. Placement in out-of-state institutions is sought for these adolescents for two (2) primary reasons: (1) lack of space in Alaska's child-serving institutions; or (2) the youngster has special needs that cannot be provided for by Alaska's existing facilities and resources.

Alaska is certainly no stranger to the practice of sending its residents to the lower 48 to receive care and treatment that is unavailable here; in fact, this practice has been the rule rather than the exception in the not too distant past. For example, until 1957, the entire program for the care and treatment of the mentally ill in Alaska was the responsibility of the Office of Territories, U.S. Department of the Interior, and Alaskans in need of treatment were sent to Morningside Hospital in Portland, Oregon under a contract with the Federal Government. This situation has been remedied with the construction of Alaska Psychiatric Institute in 1962, the development of regional mental health clinics at statehood, and the passage of the Community Mental Health Services Act in 1975, allowing for the creation of a statewide network of Community Mental Health Clinics.

We believe there is an ever increasing awareness of the special needs of children and adolescents and a general belief that existing services and resources are either inadequate or too fragmented to meet those needs.

The information we have gathered and presented here would seem to bear that assumption out. Further study and documentation is, of course, necessary as plans and proposals are developed.

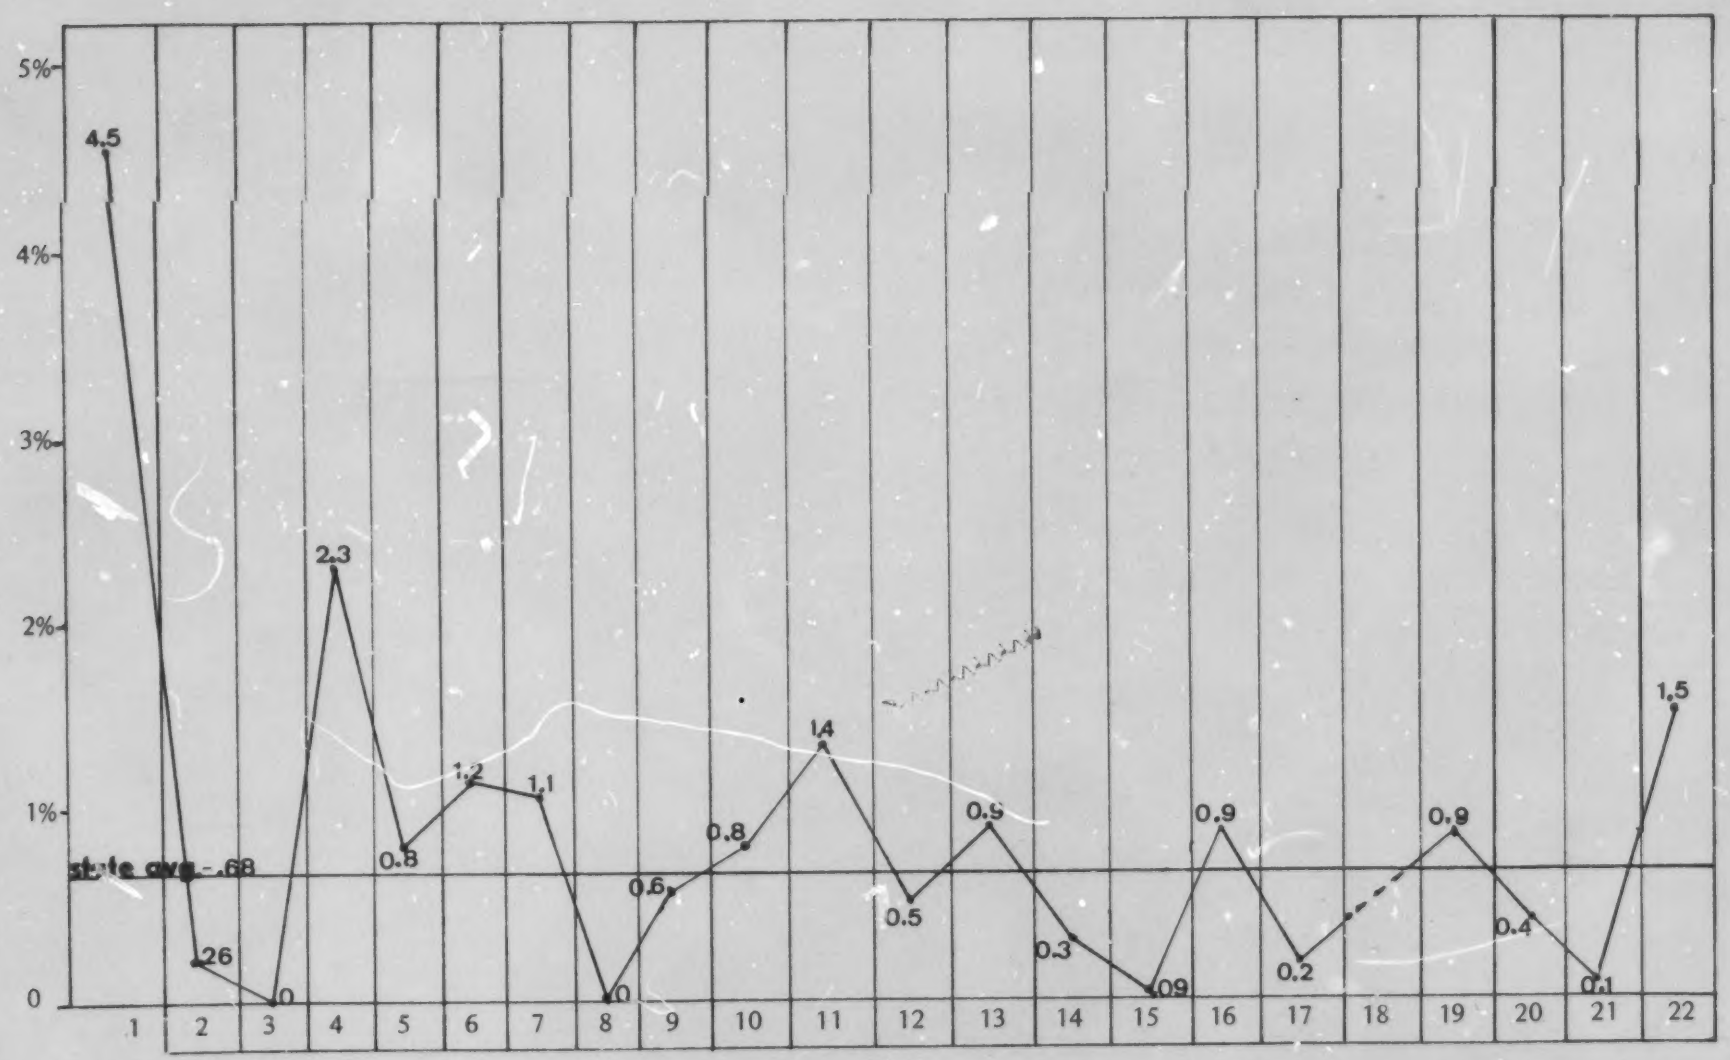
INDICATORS OF NEED

Child Abuse or Neglect Cases

The number and location of reported child abuse/neglect cases were provided by the Division of Social Services. The reporting period from which this information was drawn was July 1, 1977, to March 31, 1978. The percentages included in the following graph were computed by dividing the total number of cases in each mental health district by the same district's total school age population ($\frac{\text{district case total}}{\text{district school age population}}$). The state average was computed by dividing the total number of child abuse/neglect cases in the state by the total school age population in the state ($\frac{\text{state case total}}{\text{state school age population}}$).



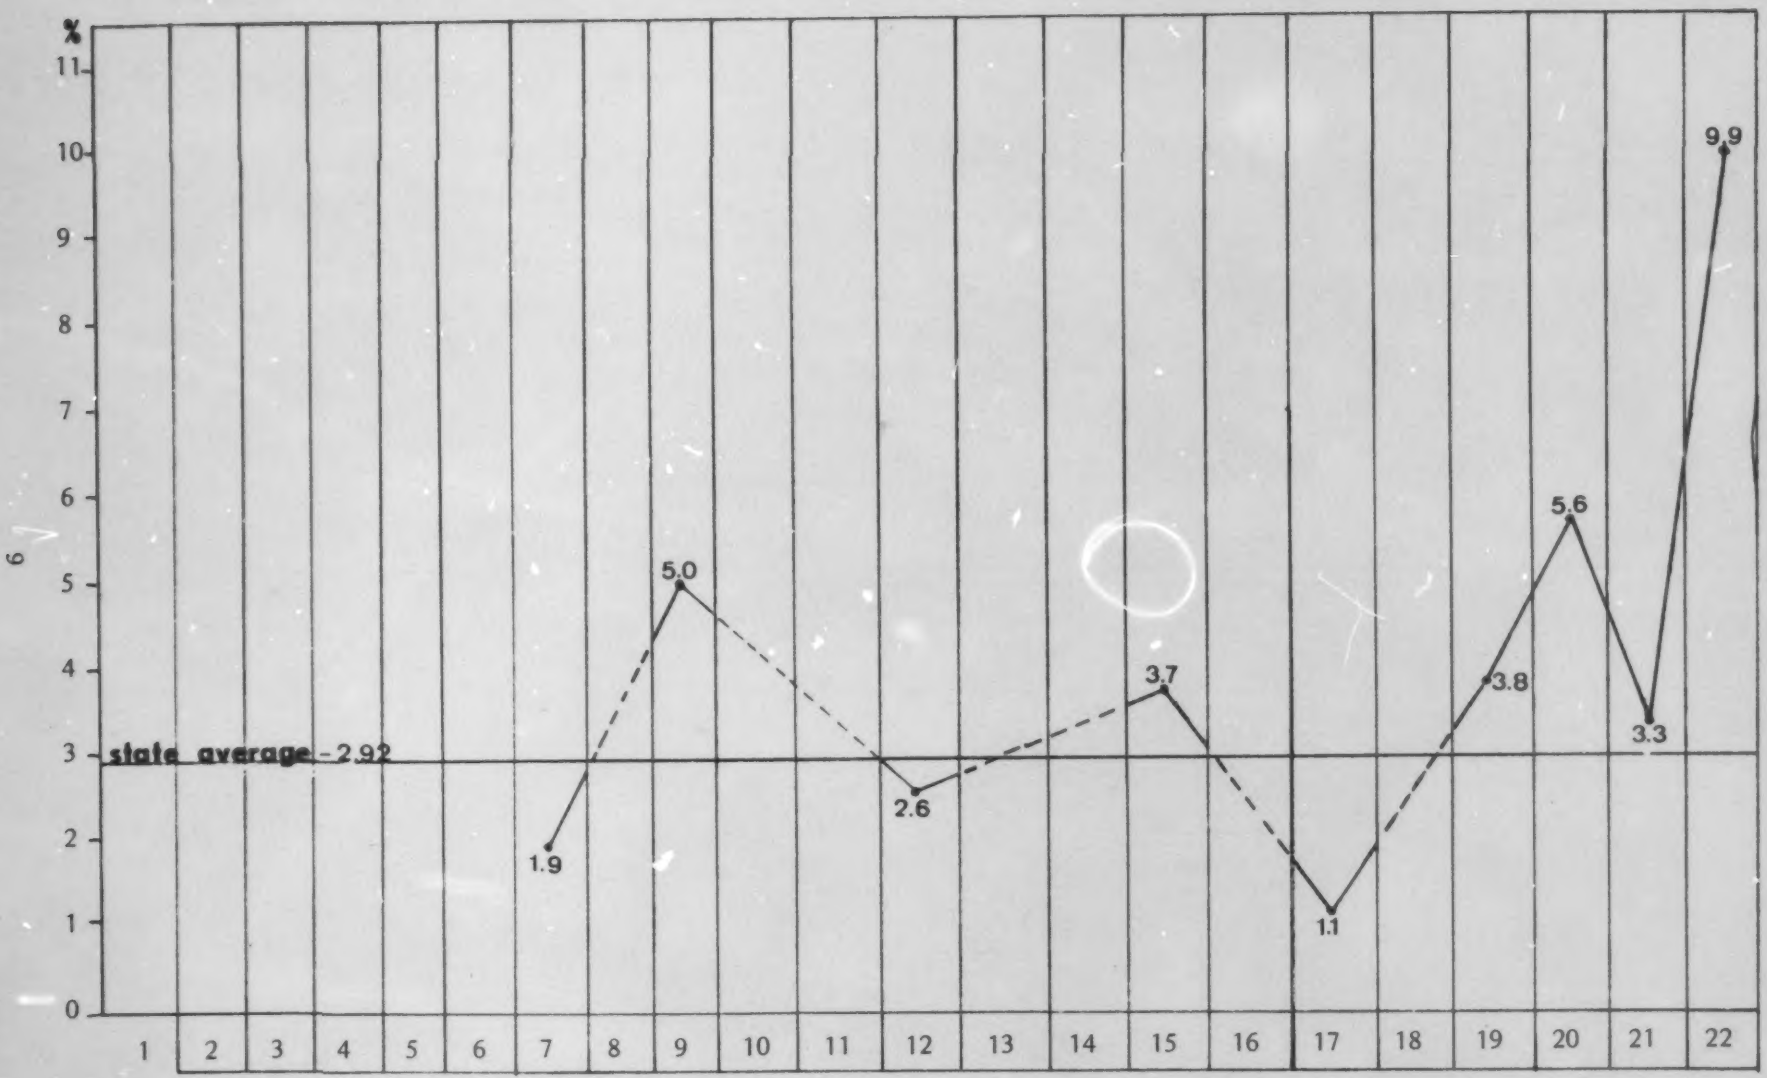
13

Child Abuse/Neglect Cases

Juvenile Arrests

The information on the number of juvenile arrests was provided by the Criminal Justive Planning Agency for 1976 and 1977. Not all districts had communities within them reporting arrests to this agency.

Percentages presented on the following graph were computed by dividing the number of arrests in a mental health district by the same district's school age population ($\frac{\text{district arrests}}{\text{district school age population}}$). The state average was computed by dividing the total number of juvenile arrests in the state by the total school age population of reporting districts ($\frac{\text{total arrests statewide}}{\text{total school age population}}$). Juvenile arrest figures are not unduplicated. This means that a juvenile may be recorded more than once for separate arrests.



Juvenile Arrests

Children Seen At Community Mental Health Centers

The information on the number of children seen in the community mental health programs throughout the state is from FY 77 with the following exceptions; the figures for mental health districts 10,13, and 14 are from the second quarter of FY 78 only. Districts listed on the graph as having no statistics available either have been operating for too short of a time or are members of the Tanana Chiefs Conference. Members of the Tanana Chiefs Conference have aggregated statistics rather than district specific numbers.

The percentages in the following graph were computed by dividing the total number of children seen at the community mental health programs by the same district's total school age population ($\frac{\text{number of children seen}}{\text{district school age pop.}}$). The state average was derived by dividing the total number of children seen by community mental health programs in the state by the total school age population of the state ($\frac{\text{state total of children seen}}{\text{state school age population}}$).

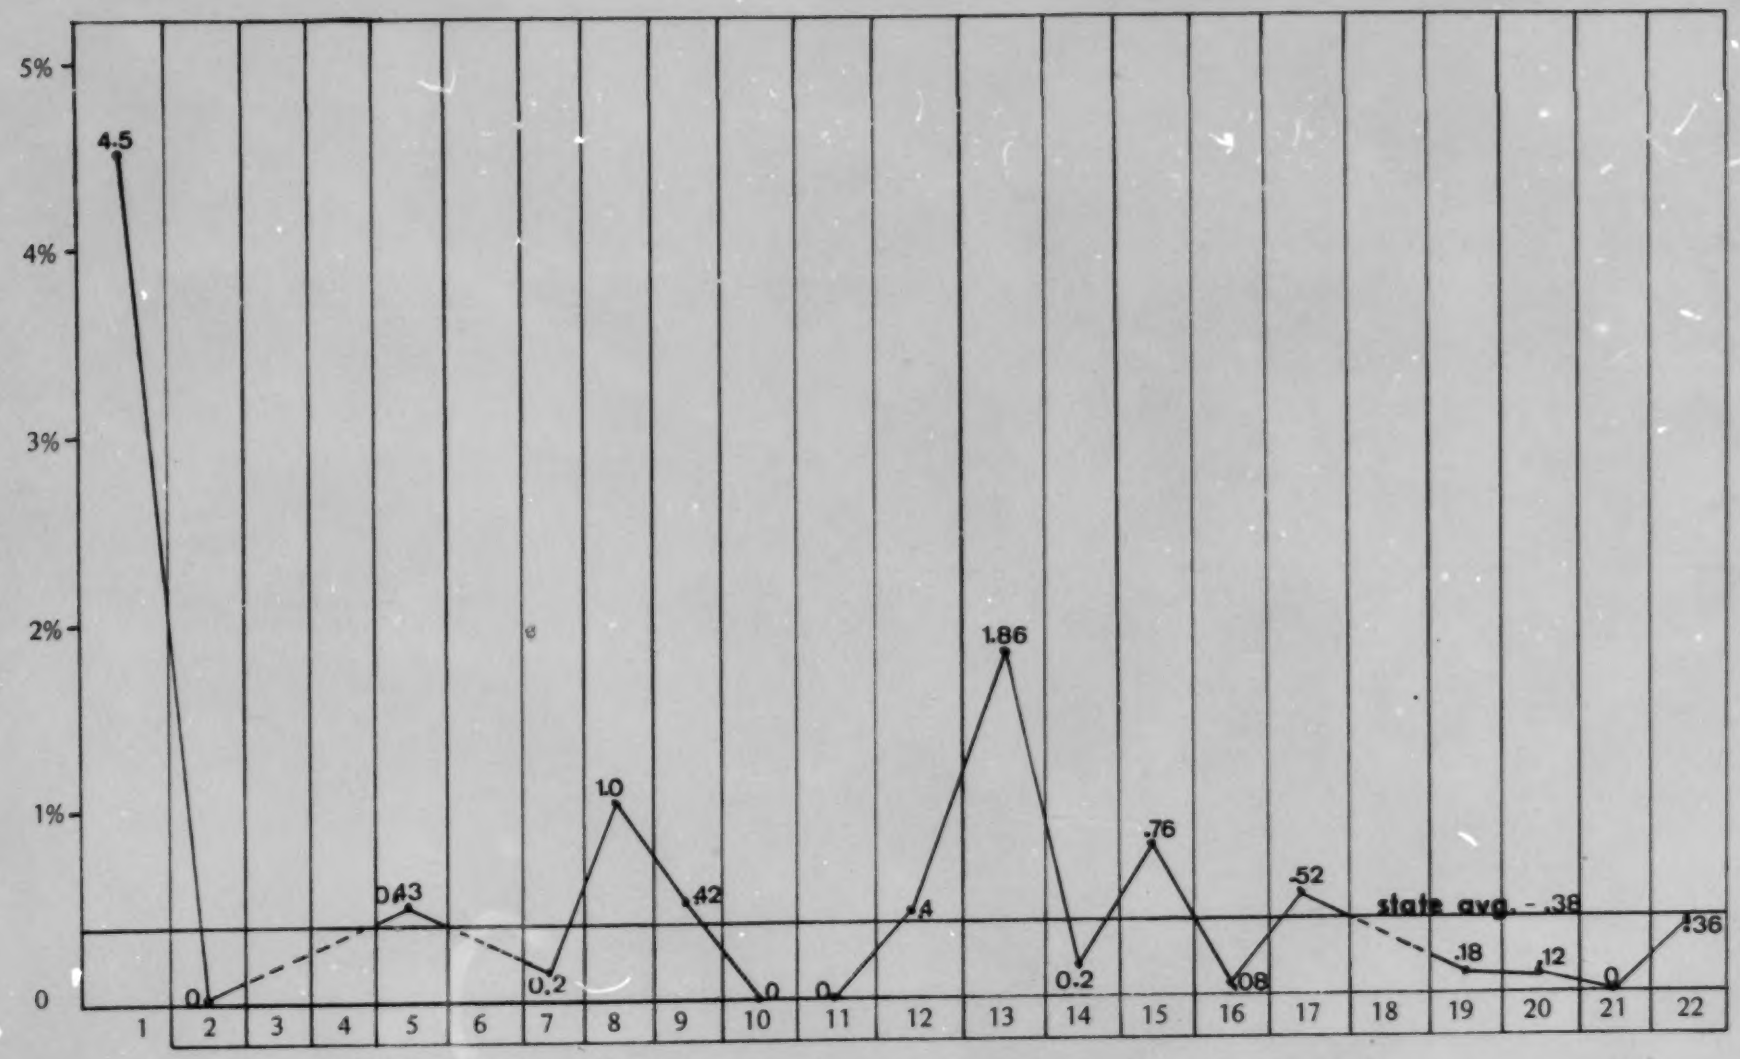
Children Identified As Emotionally Disturbed

Information on the number of emotionally disturbed children identified by school special education programs was provided by the Department of Education for the last half of the 1976 - 1977 school year. The percentages presented in the following graph were computed by dividing the total number of disturbed students in each mental health district by the same district's total school age population ($\frac{\text{number of disturbed students in district}}{\text{district total of school age children}}$). The state average was computed by dividing the total number of emotionally disturbed students in the state by the total school age population of the state ($\frac{\text{state total of disturbed children}}{\text{state school age population}}$).



Children Identified As Emotionally Disturbed

Dropout Rate

The dropout rates used herein are from the 1976 - 1977 school year. They were provided by the Department of Education in percentage form. The state average for dropouts was computed by dividing the total number of dropouts by the state school age population ($\frac{\text{total number of dropouts}}{\text{state school age population}}$). Anchorage was not included in these computations as it had a combined dropout and withdrawal rate.

Disturbances and Behavior Disorders of Childhood and Adolescence

The information on disturbances and behavior disorders of childhood and adolescence is taken from the Division of Mental Health's Summary of Client and Service Data for FY 77.

The percentages in the following graph were computed by dividing the number of cases in each mental health district of disturbances and behavior disorders by the total number of cases closed in each mental health district ($\frac{\text{district total of cases}}{\text{district total of cases closed}}$). The member districts of the Tanana Chiefs Conference are starred (*) as these districts' data is aggregate and therefore the same. Those districts without percentages have been in operation too short of a time to have accumulated comparable data.

Social Maladjustment

The information on the cases of social maladjustment is taken form the Division of Mental Health's Summary of Client and Service Data, FY 77.

The percentages in the following graph were computed by dividing the number of social maladjustment cases in each mental health district by the total number of cases closed in each district ($\frac{\text{district total of cases}}{\text{district total of cases closed}}$). The member districts of the Tanana Chiefs Conference are starred (*) as these districts' data is aggregate and therefore the same. Other Nonpsychotic Mental Disorders

The information on other nonpsychotic mental disorders is taken from the Division of Mental Health's Summary of Client and Service Data, FY 77.

The percentages in the following graph were computed by dividing the number of other nonpsychotic mental disorders cases in each mental health district by the total number of cases closed in each mental health district $\left(\frac{\text{district total of cases}}{\text{district total of cases closed}}\right)$. The member districts of the Tanana Chiefs Conference are starred (*) as these districts' data is aggregate and therefore the same. Those districts without percentages have been in operation too short of a time to have accumulated comparable data.

District 1 - Barrow
Narrative Summary

Mental Health District 1 has the highest percentage in the state of child abuse/neglect cases based on school age population. There were 48 cases of child abuse or neglect in this district during the reporting period.

The average dropout rate for district 1 schools was 2.7%. This rate was slightly above the state average.

There were 47 students in district 1 identified by the schools as emotionally disturbed. These individuals represent 4.5% of the district 1 school age population. This is the highest percentage of identified emotionally disturbed children in the state.

Thirty-nine youth under the age of 19 were seen at the community mental health center in Barrow. These individuals represent 3.5% of the school population; one of the highest percentages in the state.
